We have seen how important it is to give an example when you say your opinion. Now we are going to look at arguments.

An example is taken from your own experience, or that of other people. It’s more personal than an argument. An argument is not necessarily the same thing. It does not have to be something you have experienced. But it is based on what you know.

Imagine someone asks you if you prefer to go by tube or by car in London.

If you say: “I prefer to go by tube,” you are simply giving your opinion, without any argument.

If you say, “I prefer to go by tube because it’s quicker during rush hour,” you’re giving an argument. This argument is the rapidity of the tube.

If you say, “I prefer to go by tube because it’s quicker during rush hour and I’m more likely to arrive on time,” you’re giving 2 arguments: the rapidity and the certainty of arriving on time.

Of course, you can also give examples from your own experience. An example helps to support your argument, but it does not replace it.
Look at these sentences.

For each of the sentences, give one argument or more.
