Wine grower

Dennis: Mr Yannis Ydreos? Hello, I'm Dennis Viney and I have just taken over my uncle's wine estate, after he retired. Yes, I know, my name is very apt! Perhaps that's why I studied oenology, the science of wine... I'd like to invite you and your friend to a wine tasting in my cellars next Tuesday evening. That's your day off? Great!

I see you have several Greek wines on your menu. Wouldn't you like to add a bit of variety by offering regional wines? Yes, those are my vineyards on the hillside over there. Lovely southern exposure! Red, white and rosé, yes, and I bottle it myself. I love my job! You'd like it too? Obviously, it's not always easy. But each season has something different: pruning the vines in winter, spraying the young leaves in spring and planting new vines...

In summer we tie in the branches, remove superfluous leaves, and thin out some of the bunches of grapes... all by hand, of course! I do have two workers to help me and in September, for the harvest, I get seasonal workers. Then we start the vinification, or winemaking process, to transform these lovely grapes into wine! But in addition to the work on the land, I also have to run the company, do sales forecasts, and the accounts, which is no easy task for me! I had to take some lessons in bookkeeping. Then there's the marketing aspect to find new customers, and trade fairs to present my wines, all the distribution networks. Yes, last year's heat wave produced some very good wine. But each year is different! Anyway, if we are in real difficulty, all the other wine growers are there to help. See you on Tuesday, then!

In a similar line of work, Dennis could also have been:

Wine waiter - cellar master – wine producer - oenologist – cellar man – wine merchant...

A few words relating to a wine grower's work:
