Film director

Jack: Yes, honey, what do you want? Be quick, I'm in a hurry! Earnest, don't forget the props! We start filming again in 15 minutes. So, honey, what is it about? My job? Do you really want me to explain this in three minutes? Well, the director is the boss on the set, with a lot of artistic, technical and financial responsibilities. Work starts long before filming, darling! First of all, I must get a good story to adapt, find a producer and a screenwriter for the script. I need to split the story into scenes. For each one, I need all the details to plan the dialogues, the sets, the action, the frames and the sound.

I cast the actors and recruit the technicians. I build up my team. Then I start filming. It can take months. After that, I cut the film with the help of an editor. Finally, there is all the publicity, the interviews and the fear that the film will be a flop. There you go. I learned on the job. At first I was an editor, then an assistant director. A-Levels? A bit more than that darling! Five years in a school of cinema. Is that OK? Oh, by the way, you can also call me a filmmaker.
